Charles James was quoted as saying, "Some of the loudest and most vocal criticism has come from some of Microsoft's competitors."

I would say that this is only true because they have the money and power to be vocal. However, I agree completely that if this is all that is going to be done to MS even though they have been found guilty, then the entire process was a waste of time. How much money did US tax payers spend to get a guilty verdict only to have it basically ignored by a remedy that has absolutely no teeth?

Most little guys in the industry are afraid of MS and will not be vocal.

Best regards.
